Farm Labor Contractor Responsibilities for Employees Handling Pesticides

Who is responsible and liable for violations of California pesticide laws and regulations when a grower (property operator) hires a Farm labor Contractor (FLC) and the contracted employee is handling pesticides?

The determination of responsibility is based on the definitions of “employer” and “employee” found in section 6000 of Title 3 of the California Code of Regulations (3CCR 6000). “Employer” is any person who exercises primary direction and control over the services, or activities of an employee. “Employee” is any person who, for any kind of compensation, performs work, services, or activities covered by Division 6 – Pesticides and Pest Control Operations (3CCR 6000 – 6960).

When the grower is directing and controlling the services or activities of the employee the grower becomes responsible for pesticide worker safety requirements (e.g. pesticide safety training, personal protective equipment, etc. 3CCR 6724, 6738 & 6739 respectively) and general pesticide use requirements (e.g. general standards of care, wellhead protection, etc. 3CCR 6600 and 6609, respectively)

A FLC cannot direct or control the services or activities of their employee when those services or activities include handling pesticides UNLESS they are also a licensed and registered pest control business. (Food and Agricultural Code 11701 – 11897 and 3CCR 6500-6576).

Additional information regarding Employer Identification is available in the Department of Pesticide Regulation (DPR) Pesticide Use Enforcement Program Standards Compendium Volume 8: Guidelines for Interpreting Pesticide Laws, Regulations, and Labeling; Chapter 6. Worker Safety; Section 6.7. This is the standard we use to determine employer identification and responsibility.
